Chapter 1 by Christopher Kropp

XI

The farmers nearby got on well with the pigs and they enjoyed a prosperous existence. The pigs took all the wealth and food, save for what was needed to keep the working animals alive. While Napoleon never left Manor Farm, and rarely left the house, he sometimes sent out squealer to handle relations with other farms and things of the sort.

On the southern farm with whom the pigs had no formal relation there was a group of animals in much the same situation as that of Animal farm had been before Old Major died. The leader of the animals of Sounor Farm had been trying to reach out to the pigs in order to get advice on how to proceed with creating an equal society for all animals. Luckily during one of their attempts they ran into Clover who called over Benjamin. Being an old donkey and his heart weakening with his age Benjamin collapsed on his run to see what was happening. Clover rushed over and quickly tried to help him, he refused and only requested to know what was going on. In response to this Clover replied "The animals of Sounor Farm want to rebel, they need help."

Benjamin replied saying "Don't...trust.....each.....other" and with that he let out one final heave and remained still.

Clover warned them to avoid the pigs loyal to napoleon at all costs and ran off to a secluded area of the farm.

at which point they were close enough to the house to be noticed, With a sudden bang the farmhouse door flew open and out came a brigade of dogs followed by squealer. The dogs surrounded the two pigs and they were immediately addressed by squealer.

"What do you want, answer quickly."

"We are representatives from old Young-Sam we wish to speak to the leader here"

"Is this Young-Sam here with you?"

"Not currently but...."

"Return and tell this young-sam that the glorious leader Napoleon will meet with him here in one fortnight." Squealer said interrupting the pigs then immediately turning back into the farmhouse with the door slamming behind him.

About half of the dogs remained outside and escorted the pigs off of Manor Farm. In the report to Young-Sam the representatives learned that he had been informed of almost everything except for the meeting in two weeks.

Back in the farmhouse Squealer was interrupted by several dogs returning early dragging the body of Benjamin. Napoleon instructed him to stash it in the basement then to catch up with the other dogs and tell them to patrol the border. Napoleon turns to Squealer and instructs him to prepare a prison for Young-Sam in case taking him prisoner is needed.

After nearly two weeks have passed Young-Sam seizes an opportunity and chases the master of Sounor farm off of the property. The animals decide to wait after the meeting with "Glorious Leader Napoleon" Even though they have seen how the animals of Manor Farm are treated.

As Young-Sam and the two representatives made their way to the border they see what appears to be a line of ten dogs waiting. As they draw nearer it becomes apparent that there is in fact a line of twenty dogs each standing back to back to guard both farms. All of the dogs turn and surround them in their trip to the farmhouse.

As they approach Squealer is standing nearby to invite them in and locks the door behind them, leaving two dogs behind on either side to guard the doors. He repeats this procedure at every door they pass at this point they were all regretting coming but they were past the point of no return. Eventually they were led to a room in the basement with no windows and all of the walls were covered with some sort of metal. In a great wingback chair at the end of the room sat

The next morning the animals gathered to hear the yearly speech by Napoleon. During which Napoleon had arranged to have Young-Sam pushed off of the roof. None of the animals had any idea what had happened or would happen until there was a loud crash and a pig hit the ground behind them. This seemed to be perfectly
